Short of the little mechanical things pointed out in my inline comments, this is a fine piece of research and writing. I can see you bouncing off this right into a dream design, but really if you maintain the same level of quality you can pretty much do anything you want.

It goes without saying, you should try your hand at the ULRA. But for that, the one thing that I think you need will be better illustrations/figures to convey your many points about touch screens.

Finally, your questionnaire on cognitive psychology shows a good grasp of the field even in the limited time that you were exposed to it. Your answers on the interaction design side are a little general, but I can still see that the connections are understood.
